Servant of God Elisabeth Turgeon (1840-1881)

Materials Needed: Copy of Elisabeth Turgeon's biography (short version), copies of worksheets, pencils, and pencil crayons.

Gathering:

1. Have the children gather around, close their eyes and sit quietly for a moment.
2. Take a moment to talk to the children about one of your favourite teachers growing up. Emphasize the teacher's qualities that you liked and share specific examples of things you remember most about them.
3. Ask the children to take a moment and think about one of their teachers at school that they really liked. Prompt them to think about what they liked about their teacher; was your teacher kind, patient, caring? What did you learn from your teacher?

Listening:

1. Read the biography of Elisabeth Turgeon to the children (pg 4-5).
2. Discuss with the children what made Elisabeth Turgeon a good teacher. Be sure to touch on her many qualities (dedication, kindness, acceptance of others, quick to forgive, etc).

Doing:

1. Ask the children to think of different ways that they can be a positive example to other people around them. Ask them "how can you teach others about God through your actions?" (For example: donating food and clothing to the less fortunate, help a younger sibling with homework, etc.)
2. Have the children complete the activity sheet by drawing pictures to represent the different ways they can be a good example and teach others around them about God's love.
3. Ask the children to write a short description of what they have drawn.
4. Give the children time to share their drawings and descriptions with others.

Going:

1. Bring the session to a close by reading the prayer for the beatification of Elisabeth Turgeon to the group (pg 8).

Her Life

Elisabeth Turgeon was born on February 7, 1840, in Beaumont, across the Saint Lawrence River from Quebec City. She was a gifted student and wanted to pursue an education, but the death of her father when she was only 15 meant that she had to stay home and help her mother with the education of her younger sisters. At 20, she was at last able to go to the Laval teacher's college in Quebec to prepare to work as a teacher.

In 1863, she became the principal of a school near the family home. She was a good teacher, but had two brushes with death and had to take a year off. At the end of the 1871-1872 school year, another bout of illness forced her to quit for good. She turned with trust to "good Saint Anne" and promised to teach for free at Saint-Anne-de-Beaupré if she were healed. As she was fulfilling this promise, Father Jean Langevin, who had been named Bishop of Rimouski, asked her to come and direct the small community of teachers that was being formed there. Elisabeth Turgeon believed that God's will was for her to go into religious life.

She arrived in Rimouski on April 3, 1875. Bishop Langevin called the group the Sisters of the Elementary Schools.<sup>1</sup> He entrusted to Elisabeth the task of forming good teachers to fulfill the need for Christian education for the poor children of the surrounding countryside. When she was made superior, Mother Marie Elisabeth (her name in religious life) occupied herself with establishing the community of Sisters. She founded the community's first mission on January 2, 1880, and two others the following September, in outlying, poor parts of the Diocese of Rimouski. It was a daring move, proof of great trust in God. Then she opened a private school in Rimouski, where the novices could have their first teaching experience.

Charity was the unifying principle in Elisabeth's life. Her love was made up of tenderness; one of her companions recalled that she was quick to forgive and accepted everyone with never any bitterness or animosity. Her health challenges ought to have limited her ability to work as a teacher, but she made up for it with exceptional moral force. Her constant sweet nature and serenity always masked her suffering. Mother Marie Elisabeth patiently and joyfully overcame hunger, cold, and bodily weakness and, in imitation of Jesus, she kept silent when falsely accused by others.

It was inevitable that the frail health of this Servant of God would give out. On her deathbed, she reminded those present what the Lord was calling them to: "My Sisters, I particularly recommend union, in fraternal charity, for when you are united in a community, when peace reigns among its members, it is heaven on earth." She died peacefully on August 17, 1881, at the age of 41.

Her Spirituality

Elisabeth Turgeon's spirituality was centred on the mission of teaching and Christian education. This was essentially the mission of Christ and the Church, the mission of salvation which had to be transmitted through education and the instruction of poor country children, and was realized in the consecrated life. She counted on God for the success of the mission: "He will strengthen you and enlighten you, and he will give intelligence to those whom you are bringing to him."

Her spirituality was lived in Christian faith, charity, and hope. Very early, Elisabeth Turgeon had heard the invitation of God the Father, "the good God", to enter into communion with him. Her whole ambition was to know Jesus, to love him, and to make him known to children.

Elisabeth Turgeon had a strong and vital practice of intercessory prayer. She relied completely on prayer for the necessities of life, for healing, for help in managing practical affairs, for conversion, and for special graces for herself and others. She showed tremendous trust in Mary and had particular devotion to "this good Mother". For Elisabeth Turgeon, Mary was the surest way to go to Jesus. This explains the motto of the Congregation of the Sisters of Our Lady of the Holy Rosary: "All for Jesus through Mary."
